BEE Friendly Pollinators in the Landscape

What a great opportunity the landscape industry has to sell the benefits of a well designed landscape. It is well known that a diverse landscape benefits the environment vital to pollinators, birds and other wildlife as well as creating a great place for people to enjoy.

In recent years there has been a lot of discussion about the decline in bee and pollinating insect populations. While on-going research seems to indicate that there is no one single cause for this decline, there is evidence that changes in some of our industry practices will help increase the population.

Every habitat of every size counts, from window boxes, patio planters, small back yard gardens and landscaped gardens to farms, golf courses, school gardens, corporate and university campuses. All spaces where people live, work and play can, with the correct planting, offer essential food and shelter for pollinators.

Woody plants and perennials both play a role.

While there is more publicity about perennials that offer pollen and nectar sources, trees and shrubs play an equally important part of nature's critical life cycle. Many woody plants, as well as perennials, are food sources for the larval stage of our beloved butterflies and moths.

Native and non-native plants can be good for bee-friendly landscapes.

A recent study by the University of Illinois - Chicago found that neighborhoods with the highest floral diversity have the greatest abundance of bees and the greatest richness/diversity of bees. Yards with turf had fewer bees than yards with flower gardens.

As you are designing, be aware of the host plants necessary to attract many of these insects. Pollen and nectar plants only solve half of the problem. Without host plants, many insects will not successfully reproduce.
